➔ Australian voters rejects greater Indigenous right?

Australia has roundly rejected greater rights for Indigenous citizens. In a voting that was about whether to give Indigenous citizens greater right to aboriginal people most people voted against the proposal.

Till 88% counting of votes 59% has cited against giving any special privilege to aboriginals.

The reform would have given voting rights to Aboriginal and Torres islanders.

The reform would also have created a consultative body that weigh in on laws that affect indigenous community.

President Anthony Albanese had widely promoted voting for giving preferences to Indigenous people. Were the votes in favour, Australian constitution would have been amended.
