Options or stratagem ?

Court should limit governor's power to refer bills to President without cause

The editorial is about several states moving to the Supreme Court against the governor withholding the bill .

Recently Kerala , West Bengal has moved to courts against the governor not assenting the bill . The other issue is the central government , not giving his assent to many of the bills that were referred to by the governor. States have said that this is a direct Veto by the central government in state matters . Also it is against federal structure .

The constitution says that a governor can either give assent to a bill or withhold the bill . Here no time period is given till which the governor can withhold a bill . The Governor can also send the bill to the President for consideration . The President can disapprove of the bill .

In previous judgements SC has held that the governor should return the bill to assembly if not giving consent . But governors are not following SC's previous judgements .
